Beach of Falesá"
is a short story by Scottish

Get Free Bottle Imp The

author Robert
Louis Stevenson.
It was first published in the Illustrated London News in 1892, and later published in book form in the short-story
collection
Island Nights'
Entertainments (1893). The

story is told in the first person by John Wiltshire, a British copra trader on the fictional South Sea island of Falesá. Upon arriving on the island, he meets a rival trader named Case, who (in an

apparently friendly gesture)
arranges for him to be "married"
to a local girl named Uma in a ceremony designed to impress the natives but to be completely non-binding in the view of

Get Free Bottle Imp The

Europeans.

Wiltshire soon discovers that Uma has a taboo attached to her which causes all the other natives to refuse to do business with him, to Case's profit. He also hears rumors of Case having been involved in the suspicious deaths of his previous competitors.

Although realising that he has been tricked, Wiltshire has genuinely fallen in love with Uma, and has their marriage

Get Free Bottle Imp The

legalised by a passing missionary. "The Bottle Imp" (1891) is a short story by the Scottish
author Robert
usually found in the short story
collection
Island Nights'
Entertainments.

Get Free Bottle Imp The

It was first published in the New York Herald (February–March 1891) and Black and White London (March–April 1891). In it, the protagonist buys a bottle with an imp inside that grants wishes. However, the

bottle is cursed; if the holder dies
bearing it, their soul is forfeit to hell.

Keawe, a poor Hawaiian man, buys a strange bottle from a sad, elderly gentleman who credits the bottle with his

Get Free Bottle Imp The

fortune. He promises that an imp residing in the bottle will also grant Keawe his every desire. Of course, there is a catch – the bottle must be sold at a loss, i.e. for less than its owner originally paid, or else it will simply return to him. The currency used in the transaction must also be in coin (not paper money or a bank cheque/check). The bottle may not be thrown or given away. All of these commands must be transmitted from each seller to each purchaser. If an owner of the bottle dies without having sold it in the prescribed manner, that person's soul will burn for eternity in Hell. The bottle was said to have been brought to Earth by the Devil and first purchased by Prester John for millions of dollars; it was owned by Napoleon and Captain James Cook and accounted for their great successes. By the time of the story the price has diminished to fifty dollars. Keawe buys the bottle and instantly wishes his money to be refunded, to convince himself he has not been suckered. When his pockets fill with coins, he realizes the bottle does indeed have unholy power. He finds he cannot abandon it or sell it for a profit, so he wishes for his heart's desire: a big, fancy mansion on a landed estate.

Get Free Bottle Imp The

Get Free Bottle Imp The

Get Free Bottle Imp The

Upon his return to Hawaii, Keawe's wish has been granted,
but at a price:
his beloved uncle and cousins have been killed in a boating
accident, leaving Keawe sole heir to his uncle's fortune.

Get Free Bottle Imp The

Keawe is horrified, but uses the money to build his house. After explaining the risks, he sells the bottle to a friend. "The Isle of Voices" is a short story written by Robert Louis Stevenson, first published in his collection

Island Nights'
Entertainments
in 1893. The protagonist is a man named Keola living on the island of Molokai, Hawaii.
Keola and his wife live with her father Kalamake, a

Get Free Bottle Imp The

notorious sorcerer who appears to have an inexhaustible supply of money despite never doing any work.
One day, Kalamake uses a magic spell to transport Keola
to an unfamiliar island where the two of them are

Get Free Bottle Imp The

invisible to the inhabitants.

The literary world was shocked when in 1889, at the height of his career, Robert

Get Free Bottle Imp The

announced his intention to settle permanently on the Pacific island of Samoa.
His readers were equally shocked when he began to use the subject material offered by his new environment, not to promote a

Get Free Bottle Imp The

romance of empire, but to produce some of the most ironic and critical treatments of imperialism in n ineteenth-
century fiction.
In these stories, as in his work
generally, Stevenson shows

Get Free Bottle Imp The

himself to be a virtuoso of narrative styles: his Pacific fiction includes the domestic realism of 'The Beach at Falesé, the folktale plots of 'The Bottle Imp' and 'The Isle of Voices', and the

modernist blending of naturalism and symbolism in The Ebb-Tide. But beyond their generic diversity the stories are linked by their concern with representing the multiracial society of which

their author had become a member. In this collection - the first to bring together all his shorter Pacific fiction in one volume - Stevenson emerges as a witness both to the cross-cultural encounters of nineteenth-century imperialism and to the creation of the global culture which characterizes the post-colonial world.
